

STATE ASKS MOKENA BUILD SEWER

State Water Board Recommendation Not Acted On By Council

The sanitary state water board at Springfield is recommending the installation of sanitary sewers in the small villages and cities in the state. C. J. Claussen, technical secretary, has written the following letter to village President Harry F. Mall and the board of trustees at Mokena: Village President and Board of Trustees, Mokena, Illinois. Gentlemen:

We are again directing your attention to the need for a public sanitary sewer system at Mokena, and, in view of the possibility that Federal financial assistance can now be secured for this very necessary project, we urge that you revive consideration of a sanitary sewerage project.

Our records show that many objectionable nuisances exist throughout the village because of the lack of proper facilities for collecting and disposing of sewage. Installation of a sewer system will correct the following health hazards which will continue to become more dangerous as long as the improvement is delayed.

1. The elimination of outdoor privies, of course, removes the hazard of fly-borne diseases. It is not necessary for us to point out the undesirability of such toilet facilities from the standpoint of convenience.

2. All private septic tanks and cesspools can be removed from service when sanitary sewers are available, thus, eliminating any open discharge of sewage to street ditches, alleys or open streams. This applies to sink drainage as well. It has been our experience that villages served by public water supplies but which have no sewer system are continuously troubled by minor nuisances resulting from the use of private septic tanks and cesspools. A serious health hazard is involved in that playing children may have contact with the sewage discharged from private outlets and may thus contract serious diseases. At one southern Illinois, these conditions brought about the death of a child after which the city was sued for permitting the sanitary conditions to exist.

3. Undoubtedly, there are some private wells still in use at Mokena. The existence of outdoor toilets, private septic tanks and cesspools creates a definite hazard to such private wells in that the soil becomes contaminated so that pollution of the water in the wells may eventually take place.

4. The installation of a sanitary sewer system will make possible the complete and effective drainage of all basements in your village in such a way that flooding during wet seasons can not possibly occur.

For your information we take this opportunity to point out that a septic tank even when given proper maintenance can remove only about 1/4 to 1/2 of the objectionable matter in sewage. From a bacterial standpoint, there is very little reduction in such a unit and there may actually be a greater number of bacteria in the discharge from the tank than in the sewage discharged to it. Accordingly, a septic tank is not a safe or desirable means of sewage disposal for private residences in a built-up community.

The fact that your village can obtain Federal financial assistance in providing the sewer system should be given emphasis in explaining this project to the people. There are about 15 small Illinois municipalities which have sewerage systems under construction at this time because the availability of Federal financial assistance has made it possible for them to afford these improvements when they could not possibly have installed them if the entire cost of improvement had to be borne by the taxpayers. If the people of your village realize that they have an opportunity to obtain this very necessary improvement at a small percentage of the actual cost, we are sure there can be little objection.

This Board is very desirous that your village install the sewer system because our experience has shown that stream pollution in violation of the sanitary water board law will probably result in the future unless the sewer system is built. Naturally we wish to prevent any such possibility of illegal stream pollution by the village of Mokena which would make it necessary for the Sanitary Water Board to proceed under the law to enforce abatement.

Very truly yours,
C. W. Claussen,
Technical Secretary.

MOKENA PLANS $58,000 WPA VILLAGE PROJECT

The village of Mokena has been considering taking up WPA village street improvement projects. At the meeting of the village board Tuesday evening, engineer M. H. McCoy submitted in resolution form setting forth all the improvements to be made on three miles of streets throughout the village including the laying of storm water drains making a total cost of approximately $58,000.

The portion of the cost which the village will have to pay would be quite small in comparison to the total cost. The project has been written up by Mr. McCoy and the board appointed Aldermen Willard Marti and Wm. Semmler to present the application to J. V. McCarthy, WPA Regional director at Joliet. The two water main projects have already been approved but so far no work has been started on same and the village officers are bringing this matter to the attention of the WPA officers and they are requesting them to get the work under way without any further delay.

Whether the village wide project will meet the approval is not definitely known until the papers have been approved in Washington. If, however, this project is approved it will be for the duration of 8 months and is to afford employment for approximately 100 men. It is understood that any man out of work whether he is on WPA or not will be eligible to work on this proposed project.

In addition to improving the village streets, the village park, the school grounds will also be included in this work and in addition about 200 trees will be planted along the various streets of the village.

The front street in Mokena for a distance of approximately 3000 feet is to be given a new seal coat of asphalt composition.

Quotations for material and cost of applying same are being received now by the village President, Harry F. Mall. The cost of this work is to be paid for from the motor fuel tax due to the village from the state.

Soon after quotations are received and considered by the village board the lowest responsible bidder will be awarded the job and work is to be commenced immediately as hot weather is required to make a good job of the seal coat.

The village board at their meeting Tuesday night decided to curb automobile speeding by engaging police to patrol the streets at an undisclosed time. Violators will be brought before police magistrate Albert Hentsch and the extreme penalty for such violations will be invoked. On Friday evening of this week the aldermen will erect stop signs at the various street intersections throughout the village and failure to comply with these signs or running through the stop signs will mean the arrest of such violators and they will be subject to a fine.

The streets of the town have been made a veritable speedway by many of the motorists thus endangering children as well as older people along these streets.

Sanitary sewer proposition was very strongly agitated at Mokena but at the time the property owners felt that it would be an unnecessary burden and as a result fought the sewer matter in court with the result that the matter was dropped.

Even though the village could secure aid in the construction of a sewer system at the present time the village officers cannot see their way clear to take up the matter at this time due to the fact that the village has several other WPA projects under consideration toward which they will have to make payments and in as much as the village is in debt on account of expensive repairs on the village water tower a year ago and for which tax anticipation warrants were issued it has been deemed better to side track the sewer proposition entirely.

In view of the fact that Mokena is considering extensive water mains and street improvements under the WPA they have just about all they can handle in a financial way. The sewer system and treating plant would run into a great many thousands of dollars and in order to meet the village portion of the cost a special assessment might have to be resorted to which no doubt the taxpayers would resent as they did when a previous attempt was made to install the sewer.

BOY DROWNS IN WORTH QUARRY

Three hours of tireless efforts with artificial respiration and a respirator failed to revive the life of Steve Zozaski after he had been under water for more than an hour. The lad, 16 years old, drowned while bathing in the gravel pit at Worth last Friday.

His disappearance was unnoticed until someone stepped on him at the bottom. Others dove for him, but the position of body eventually changed, for they had difficulty locating it. Finally Russell Hughes of Orland Park brought the body up from about 20 feet of water.

When interviewed, Russell related his experience: "We all got in a circle over a spot where he had been reported touched. We went down together. The water was muddy and I couldn't see very well but I felt around and stepped on him. He was all mixed up in the sea weed and when I grabbed his wrist, it seemed like his arm was rotten and going to pull off. I brought him to the top and his head fell back over my shoulder. His face was blue and his lips were white. I just gripped my teeth and started swimming for shore."

Artificial respiration was administered until the respirator arrived. An extra tank of oxygen had to be sent for but all in vain for after three hours, he was pronounced dead by Dr. Leavitt of Orland. Swimming in the gravel pit has been forbidden.

Auto Crash Case Taken To Court

Gerald Sluiter of the Lincoln Estates figured in an auto accident on the Lincoln highway in the Lincoln Estates about 9 o'clock Sunday night. Mr. Sluiter claims he had put out his hand to signal a car behind him that he was going to make a turn and that the other driver disregarded this signal and crashed into his car.

The driver of the other car which was a new Plymouth was Dino D'artolomi of Chicago Heights. With him were his brother and three other men, all from Chicago Heights. The impact ditched the Plymouth which turned over three times, smashing the front of the car very badly.

The brother of the driver sustained a broken arm and another man suffered minor cuts while the rest escaped injury.

Sluiter's car also was damaged but no one was hurt. Sluiter brought suit against D'artolomi charging him with reckless driving. When the case came up in the justice court of Justice J. M. Clark in Frankfort, D'artolomi refused to give any testimony, altho pleading not guilty. He said he was insured and that his insurance company would take care of the matter.

Dead Mouse Solves Radio Mystery

Merrill Cooper radio man at Orland Park made a very interesting discovery Monday of this week. "Why a radio fails to function" for some unexplainable reason.

On Sunday one of his patrons at Palos Park called Mr. Cooper saying that his radio was out of commission and would he come and get it and see what the trouble was. Mr. Cooper did so. He took it over to his radio shop on Monday, played it for several hours and didn't see anything the matter with it. He returned it to the owner but when the juice was turned on the radio mysteriously refused to play. Mr. Cooper was very much astonished and couldn't account for the fact.

So he took the radio back. On Tuesday morning he noticed a rather peculiar smell emanating from the set and decided he had better do a little investigating. When he began to dissect the radio he found the body of a little field mouse wedged in between some of the wires of the set. After removing the dead mouse, connecting the radio with an electrical socket it functioned perfectly.

It is presumed the little mouse ran into the set, lodged in the wires and was electrocuted when the juice was turned on.

Mr. Cooper says this is one of the many reasons why a radio goes out of commission.

Mr. Cooper thinks that the dead mouse was shifted on and off the wires as the radio was tilted in taking it in and out of the automobile. The tilting in a certain position caused the body of the mouse to clear the wires and again to become lodged in the wires thus causing the radio to function at one time and being out of commission the next.

New Frankfort Municipal Building

Above is a picture of the architect's drawing of the new proposed Frankfort municipal building for which a $12,900 bond issue was recently voted. The balance of the cost is to be made by a WPA grant application for which is now pending.

The new building is to house the fire department, jail, council rooms and mayor's office. The building will be so arranged and equipped that it can be used as a community center.

Fungus Growth Cause of Very Offensive Odor

The Roy Newton family, residing north of Mokena, on a farm, had a very peculiar experience last week.

For several days whenever the wind would shift to the south, a very nauseating odor permeated the house. At first it was thought the odor was from a dead rat or other animal that might have crawled under the porch.

For a while the odor disappeared, but last Thursday it appeared with a stronger odor than ever. In fact the family could hardly stay in the house, the odor was so strong.

Early last Friday morning Mr. Newton decided to make an investigation. The odor was traced as coming from beneath the porch. The wooden steps were removed and there was the cause of all the trouble. A fungus growth about a foot tall was found growing in the dark spot under the steps. A white string-like root, several inches long, was all that held the plant from the ground. The bottom of the plant had two wing-like shoots and then a white porous but solid stem about an inch and a half in dimension, topped with a honey comb shaped head. This head was filled with chocolate colored substance which threw off a terrible odor which the family had complained of. The white portion of the plant was a spongy substance and had the appearance of rubber.

Just what species this fungus is has not been discovered. The growth was placed in a fruit jar and sealed and brought to The News-Bulletin office and is still on exhibition, although the hot weather has caused it to shrink so that it is not more than one-fourth its original size.

Perhaps some biologist or botanist could explain just what this curious plant is.

Mokena Civic Club Gets Quick Action On Skating Rink

The newly organized Mokena civic club is really showing a peppy spirit and has accomplished one of its objectives set out for within the last 2 weeks. After the perfection of the organization the members decided to sponsor something for the benefit of the community. The first thing they came across was the abandoned ice skating rink which had been started as a WPA project the forepart of last winter but failed to materialize.

A committee headed by Arthur Shoop was appointed to look into the matter and they immediately got busy. They approached Highway Commissioner Emil Cappel and secured his services for excavating the ground to the necessary depths for a skating rink. A tractor and grader was then put on the job and within a remarkably short time the work was finished. The rink is now ready for next winter. The splendid work done by the civic organization shows what can be done if the right parties take a hold of things. The rink is not going to be managed by WPA but it will be an entirely local affair. Mr. Shoop and his committee are to be complemented on the fine spirit of aggressiveness and Commissioner Cappel and Harold Spiess who operated the tractor and grader also deserve a vote of thanks for their fine cooperation.

It is hoped that the civic club will promote and carry out their activities for the benefit of Mokena.

SYNOPSIS

Richard Exon, a poor young Englishman, befriends elderly Matthew Gering, who at his death, gives him a statement claiming he, Gering, is Rudolph Elbert Virgil, Count of Brief, of ancient Austrian nobility who was betrayed 20 years before by his twin brother, Ferdinand, whose sentence for forgery he himself served. Ferdinand appropriated his title, property and daughter. Before he dies, Gering tells Exon there is a family secret, known only to the head of the house, to be found in the great tower at Brief, by a doorway none can ever find. Exon inherits his uncle's fortune and sets out to right Gering's wrongs. En route he encounters Percy Elbert Virgil, son of the villainous Ferdinand and sees him in conference with Inskip, a diamond merchant. He engages a valet, Winter, who hates Percy and meets by chance at a garage, John Herrick, who is a linguist and who as a youth served as a page at Gering's wedding, and had visited Brief. Herrick, due eventually to fall into an inheritance, is at present unemployed and seeking pleasant work to while away a few months.

The woman smiled.

"I think you are English," she said.

I could hardly believe my ears and I think my look of amazement made her laugh. Be that as it may, the two of us laughed together as though at some excellent jest, till a bright-eyed girl came running, to see what the matter might be.

Her mother addressed her in German, still shaking with mirth, and the two of them laughed together before returning to me.

"My mother," said the girl, "can only speak two or three words, but I am better, sir, if you will say what you want."

"She's better than I am," said I. "And you are extremely good. Have you ever been in England?"

"Oh, no. But every summer an English family stays here. They come in August to fish. And they have been good to teach me as much as I know."

"Do you mean that they stay here?" said I. "That they lodge with you?"

"Always," said Brenda, proudly—for I later learned that that was her name. "They have made us a beautiful bathroom two years ago."

"Listen," said I. "From nine o'clock this morning my friend and I have been scouring the countryside to try and find an inn at which we could possibly stay. We could not even find one at which we could break our fast."

Brenda nodded sympathetically.

"The inns are no good," she said.

"Will you receive us?" I said.

"We shan't be any trouble, and my servant here will do all he can to help."

The girl consulted her mother. I watched them with my heart in my mouth.

Then—

"We shall be pleased," she said simply, "until the end of July."

As may be believed, we did no more that evening than minister to our needs and stroll in content about our heritage. The house, which had been a bailiff's, was full of fine rooms: our apartments were all that two men could ever desire: and the Rolls was lodged in a coach-house which would have accepted three cars. All this was well enough, but the honest goodwill that was shown us was such as a man remembers as long as he lives. With it all, no questions were asked and we were left to ourselves.

After breakfast the following day, we returned to the map. We found our bearings at once, for the farm was marked. The name of it was Raven: and Brief lay 11 miles off. Such a distance was very convenient, for while we could have gone to the castle in 20 minutes or less, we were out of the range of such gossip as comes to a servants' hall.

The estate was large, but the castle stood to one side; and that, of course, was something, for if it had stood in the middle, unless we were ready to trespass, we could have seen nothing at all. About the estate stood mountains—so much was clear. But whether, by climbing one, we should have a fair view of the castle was more than we could divine. Still, we carefully penciled the roads which, so to speak, bypassed Brief on the southern side, for that was the side upon which the castle was built. And then we set out to prove them. Unless the map was lying, if Brief could be commanded from any point, that point could only be reached from one of our penciled roads.

At half past ten that morning the three of us entered the Rolls, and I drove leisurely westward, while Herrick and Winter regarded the countryside. It seemed as well to get our surroundings by heart.

At every side road, I stopped, and we studied the map, so that, though our progress was slow, we all of us knew continually where we were. And then I turned north and on to our penciled roads.

It was half past twelve and we were among the mountains, when the way which we were using began to rise very steeply, after the way of a pass. This was so much to the good, but hereabouts the map and the country agreed together so ill that we could not determine the heights which we were beginning to climb. As though to confuse us still more, the road bent to and fro and doubled upon itself, while the woods through which we were moving were very thick and the trees upon either hand met over our heads. Though we were not lost, we were as good as blindfold and after five minutes had passed we knew not which way we were going nor whence we had come.

We must have threaded this natural gallery for nearly two miles, when we heard, at first very faint, the roar of falling water some distance ahead.

"And very nice, too," said Herrick, cocking an ear. "This means a break in the trees. Stop when we get there, my boy, and I will return to the map. I need hardly say that it shows no sign of water. In fact, I'm inclined to think that they guessed this bit. The temptation, no doubt, was great. Nobody seems to come here: so who on earth was ever to say they were wrong?"

Whilst he was speaking we had been rounding a bend, and, though we could not yet see it, the song of some great cascade was growing more impressive with every yard. Then we floated over a crest, and there was a bridge before us, some forty yards off.

I am sure that neither Winter nor I will ever forget the moment when we walked on to that bridge. We had never before encountered so tremendous a head of water falling from such a height; and what with the terrible might of the sheaves and tresses of foam, the everlasting roar and the definite quaking of the ground upon which we stood, we felt both dazed and abashed and looked the one to the other, as men in the presence of something they cannot conceive.

I do not know how long I stood staring, but I suddenly found that Herrick had hold of my arm. Because of the tumult I could not hear what he said, but I let him turn me about and bring me up to the parapet of the bridge.

I now had my back to the fall and at once I leaned over and down to see if the splendor below us compared with the grandeur above, but Herrick would not allow me to do as I wished, jerking my arm and shouting, until in some impatience I lifted my head.

And then I saw he was pointing—not at the raging water, but out of the gap in the trees.

A crow's mile away stood a castle, built on the spur of a foothill against the green of the woods. With the naked eye I could see four staircases, and towards the left of the pile was rising one great, round tower.

Ten minutes later, perhaps, I made Winter a little speech.

Herrick and I had strolled on, out of sound of the fall, and Winter had taken the Rolls and had caught us up.

"I want you to know," said I, "why we three are here and what we are out to do. In that castle you saw I believe there to live three people. One is the present owner, the Count of Brief: the second, his only child: and the third, a nephew of his—a Mr. Percy Virgil, by name."

"The same, sir?" said Winter, shortly.

"The same," said I. "Thank you, sir," said Winter, between his teeth.

"Now though Mr. Virgil lives there, he is not the son of the house and the castle is not his home. It is his cousin's home—and yet he lives there . . ."

"I have reason to think that the Count of Brief prefers Mr. Virgil, his nephew, before his only child: and since the Count is about as big a sweep as Mr. Virgil himself, I think it more than likely that, between the two, his cousin has a very thin time. And his cousin is a girl—the Lady Elizabeth Virgil, just twenty-four years old."

If that was as much as I said, it was more than enough to fan to a flame the embers of Winter's zeal, and from that time on he was heart and soul in the business, as I shall show.

The astonishing chance which led us straight to the viewpoint to which we had hoped to come was the only stroke of good fortune we met that day. To be sure, it was handsome enough: but the fact remains that, so far as we could discover, the bridge from which we had sighted the Castle of Brief was the one and only point on the roads we had marked from which that remarkable pile could be fairly surveyed.

We now had our bearings, and, the map proving faithful once more, we never lost them again.

By four o'clock that day we had compassed the property twice and had never seen so much as the top of the tower, but, for what it was worth, we knew the lie of the land and had marked the two entrance-drives and three or four tracks which would have accepted a car. To a great extent we had the ways to ourselves, and, except in one village, called Gola, I do not think our passage excited remark. But we ran through that twice, which was foolish, and the second time, looking back, I saw a smith and his helper run out of the forge and stand staring after the Rolls, with their tools in their hands.

When I told Herrick, he sighed. "Can't be helped," he said. "But a blacksmith's forge is as bad as a barber's shop. Gossip. And that's the worst of using a notable car. We'd better give Gola a miss for as long as we can."

It was after that that we climbed again to the bridge and, berthing the Rolls beyond it, turned to the arduous business of proving the woods through which the cascade fell down. Except by entering these, we could not possibly tell whether or not they were hiding some coin which commanded Brief, for we could only survey them by looking up from below—an angle which showed us no more than a billowing quilt of leaves.

For three full hours we fought with that mountainside, and for all the good we did we might never have left the car. We could not even reach the head of the fall, for after perhaps 250 feet I came to a hidden cornice of blue-gray rock, and though, in view of the tales which men of the mountains tell, I hardly like to say that this could not have been climbed, I should like to see the man that could have climbed it and, better still, the manner in which he went to work. As for finding a point of view, but for the roar of the water, we should not have known where we were, and, until I came back to the road, I never found so much as a rest for the sole of my foot.

Going down, I met Winter past speaking, clinging to the roots of a beech, but of Herrick I saw no sign till I came to a brake of brambles not more than 60 feet up. Here his hat was hanging, caught up on a venomous sucker that sprang from a monstrous bush, and, since he was not to be seen, I supposed that I had passed him in my descent—for had he been coming down, he would not have left his hat. I, therefore, shouted his name with all my might, to be answered from the midst of the brambles by which I stood.

"I trust," he said gravely, "that you have enjoyed your stroll. I'm not going to ask if you've viewed the promised land—first, because I know the answer, and, secondly, because I am not interested in posts of observation to which only an anthropoid ape can conveniently repair. And now, if Winter's alive, you might procure my release. I'll direct the operation—I've had nothing to do for ten minutes but work it out."

"You're not hurt?"

"No. Merely disabled. If I don't breathe, I hardly suffer at all. But to move means laceration. You see, I'm embedded in briars which simply must not be touched. Transgress this law, and you're savaged beyond belief." I heard him sigh.

So thick and fierce were the briars and so deeply was Herrick involved that a quarter of an hour went by before we could haul him out.

That was enough for us all, and we made our way home, proposing upon the morrow to assault the neighboring heights.

The burden of the next three days will hardly go into print. Enough that we fought like madmen to wrest from the mountains and forests a secret which, if they had, they would not disclose. Such harsh and unprofitable labor I never did, and when Herrick at last declared that he would no longer abuse his long-suffering flesh, I must confess I was thankful to throw in my hand.

At four o'clock on a Thursday he leaned against a fir and stated his case.

"I am tired of unseating my intestines by efforts no goat would be such a fool as to make, and I'm sick of straining my eyeballs in an effort to see through cover which is just about as transparent as a cellar of coal. In a word, I have had my fill of futility. I, therefore, suggest that we enter the enemy's lines without further delay. I may say that this suggestion belongs to the spirit alone: if I took the advice of the flesh, I should enter a nursing-home."

With that, he began to retire by the way we had come, and Winter and I came after without a word.

As we drove back to Raven, we summed up what we had learned from going about the estate, and after an excellent supper, of which we were very glad, we studied the map we had marked and laid our plans.

These were, very shortly, to make for the mouth of the northern entrance-drive. There Winter would set us down and then go off for petrol, of which we were running short. How long our visit would last, we could not tell, but when Winter had taken in fuel, he was to return with the Rolls and berth her in one of the tracks.

With that, we went to bed early, for we were to rise at dawn, more or less content that the country had forced our hands and little dreaming of the ruffie which the morrow was to bring forth.

The sky was cloudless, the world was drenched with dew and the sun was not yet upon the mountains, when Winter set us down a hundred yards from the mouth of the entrance-drive. To this there were no lodge-gates, and only a board marked "Private" distinguished its rough, brown surface from that of an ordinary road.

"The first track on the right, Winter. Back her down and take her well into the wood. You may have to wait some time, but don't go far from the car and keep out of sight of the road."

"Very good, sir," said Winter, and set a hand to his hat.

Five minutes later the Rolls was three miles off and Herrick and I were padding along the drive, one upon either side of the ill-kept road.

For a furlong the drive ran straight: then it bent to the left and the woods upon either hand began to close in: but the bracken held on and was growing tall and thick—we could see the green flood stretching beneath the trees. And then the drive curled to the right and ran into the woods.

We had covered more than a mile and the sun was up, when, something to our surprise, we heard the sound of a car. This was behind us, coming the way we had come, and at once we whipped into the bracken and kneeled down among the green stems, to let it go by.

After a moment or two, a closed car, traveling slowly, slipped into and out of our sight. The blinds of the car were drawn, and a chauffeur, wearing black livery, sat at the wheel. A glance at the number-plate showed that this was obscured.

"The return of Percy," said Herrick, "after a heavy night. I know just how he's feeling. And I'm glad I'm not his valet, if what you tell me is true."

With his words, the car disappeared, and we rose out of the bracken to hasten along in its wake.

One-Third of Farm Families Living in "Slum" Conditions, According to Survey

One out of every three farm families in the United States is living in "slum" conditions, according to a survey completed by the Department of Agriculture.

Findings of the survey were based on a three-year study by the bureau of agricultural economics and the Farm Security administration. The study included approximately 10,000,000 rural families.

"It is a conservative estimate," the report said, "that one-third of the farm families of the nation are living on standards of living so low as to make them slum families."

Poverty is as abject and as widespread in rural areas as in the most crowded sections of many large cities, the report said. Among nearly half of the farm population living conditions were said to be "sub-standard."

These conditions were said to have existed for many years and to have been aggravated by the depression. Fifty years ago three out of every four farmers owned the land they tilled. Now only a few more than half own their land. In 1935 there were 2,365,000 tenant families and the number was increasing by 200,000 a year.

Of the non-owners, 700,000 were sharecroppers, thus having status little, if any, above hired laborers, of which there were 2,700,000 in 1930. "Farm laborers are on the bottom rung of the so-called agricultural ladder and apparently are increasing in numbers," the report said.

At the height of the 1929 boom, the survey showed, there were 1,700,000 farms—homes of 7,700,000 persons—yielding a gross income of less than $600, including the value of products, sold, traded and used.

Use Roses as Food
The Chinese serve fritters on their New Year's day made from rose petals. Years ago rosebuds were served on tables like radishes. One of the legends is that Cupid, hurrying to a council of deities on Olympus with a vase of nectar, fell and spilled the contents. Roses sprang from this nectar. One of the myths pertaining to roses, notes a writer in the Rural New-Yorker, is that Milo, a maid, gave flowers to Venus. This maid had a tumor on the chin and Venus told her to apply roses from the altar to the swelling as a cure. The rose is used in arts and sciences and is related to the apple, pear and berries.

RUTH: ADVENTUROUS FAITH

LESSON TEXT—Ruth 1:6-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.—Ruth 1:16.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Girl Named Ruth.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of Ruth.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Ruth's Wise Choice.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—An Adventurous Faith.

Out of the dark fastnesses of an underground dungeon into the brightness and warmth of God's sunshine—such is the transition we make when we turn from the moral and spiritual failures of Samson to consider the lovely story of Ruth. She lived in the midst of the travails and the sorrows of life, in fact we find her at the beginning of the book which bears her name, a widow who has lost all that the world would hold dear. Yet she, because of her purity of life and devotion to God rises higher and higher, while the one of whom we spoke last week, starting with every advantage, slipped lower and lower because of his sin.

Ruth was the great-grandmother of King David, and thus this Gentile woman became one of the ancestors of Jesus. (See Ruth 4:22 with Luke 3:22.) Many folk are greatly concerned about their ancestry—one could wish that more were concerned about living such lives and developing such characters as will make them good ancestors.

Teachers and classes will do well to read and study the entire book of Ruth—only about three pages long in most Bibles—and give attention to the full story of her life, especially the picture of the kinsman-redeemer, to be later fulfilled in the Lord Jesus Christ. We must confine our comments largely to the printed portion which reveals Ruth first as a loyal and thoughtful daughter-in-law, then as one whose love was not to be denied by sorrow or circumstance, and finally as one so bound to her mother-in-law in unity of spirit that she became one with her and her people.

I. Commendable Loyalty (vv. 6-10).

Tragic misfortune had visited Naomi, who with her husband and two sons had gone from Bethlehem to Moab in a time of famine. Not only had her husband died but also her two sons, who had married Gentile women, leaving three widows in one family to mourn together. Naomi craved the fellowship of her own people in her hour of trial and arose to return to her own land.

Her departure brought out in the two daughters-in-law the expression of kindness and loyalty which should exist in every family, but which is all too often lacking. Her own testimony concerning these girls of Moab is that they had dealt "kindly" with her and with the dead. That word speaks volumes. There is so little genuine kindness in the world. Both Orpah and Ruth went with her on the way—protesting their loyal purpose to go with her all the way. Thus far the two sisters were not differentiated—but the next incident reveals Ruth as the one who had an

II. Undeniable Love (vv. 11-14).

No one could for a moment condemn Orpah for yielding to her mother-in-law's entreaty that she return to her own people. She affectionately kisses Naomi and in tears turns away. "But Ruth clave unto her."

Such love cannot be denied. It is the most precious possession that a man can have, apart from his fellowship with God. The love of a devoted father or mother, of a noble helpmate, or of a little laddie or lassie, these are the things that really make life worth while, that stand out as an oasis in the desert of life, as a light in the darkness.

But Ruth takes one more step. Her kindness and loyalty, her unswerving love lead on to a confession of her faith in the true God, and the declaration of an

III. Inseparable Unity (vv. 15-18).

Literature knows no more beautiful gem than verses 16 and 17. It was the Great Commoner, Bryan, who said, "We cannot hope to contribute to literature a sentence so exquisite and thrilling as that into which Ruth poured the full measure of a noble heart, but we can imitate her devotion."

The story is told of a fine young Englishman who left his betrothed sweetheart to go to California during the great gold rush. He was going to make a fortune and then send for her. He sent her his first gold nugget. But alas, there were none to follow and soon he became not only poverty stricken, but ill. In noble sacrifice he decided to release her from her promise, and wrote to tell her so. She (and one could almost believe her name was Ruth) took the treasured nugget, had it made into a ring engraved as a gift from her to him, with the additional words "Ruth 1:16, 17." In due time it reached the young man with its tender and inspiring message—"Treat me not to leave thee," and the assurance of her devotion until death.

May this dizzy and bemuddled world have many more characters like Ruth.

Men of the Mounted

HE CAME out of the Athabaskan night, and made himself at home by my campfire. Living up to the unwritten, yet strictly followed law of the northland trails, food was graciously offered. I could see at a glance that my wilderness guest was no ordinary person. He was neither settler nor trapper, and as we became better acquainted it occurred to me that this ruggedly handsome, clean-cut chap had been keeping his chin up and his shoulders back most of his life. Personal questions, of course, were entirely out of order, so I waited for him to reveal himself. As time passed, it also occurred to me that my guest might be a Man of the Mounted doing a bit of checking up in that district, and before I could stop myself I had opened the gate, so to speak, and much to my amazement he walked right in.

"If you're from the Royal Mounted," I began, "I might be able to help you at whatever you're doing hereabouts." Across the small campfire his gray eyes caught mine. He stared steadily, but not rudely, for a full minute without batting an eyelid. Then, he spoke:

"You're a very observing chap, aren't you?" he smiled, "and the astonishing thing is, you're quite right. The truth is, I'm a deserter from the Royal Mounted, and I hate myself for chucking it up."

"A deserter," I exclaimed in astonishment. There was a story behind all this, and I set out to get it.

"What happened? Lose a prisoner? Go on a spree, or something?"

"Nothing like that, my friend. Don't touch liquor. Didn't lose any prisoner. Clean record and six years' service. I'm only one of a few dozen that have deserted this last while, so you'll likely meet others who will tell you a story like mine."

"Well... I'm sure interested, and will keep your secret if you feel that you simply must tell your troubles to someone."

"Well, I've been trying to do my duty under a madman, a sergeant major who lived to make life miserable for himself and everyone else. For instance, our full dress uniform, as you know, is a costly and showy affair. This sergeant major would order us out in full dress uniform, then this madman would set us at chopping wood, shoveling coal, cleaning stoves, digging drains and sewers, currying horses, cleaning out the stables, and all sorts of chores that were supposed to be done in overalls or old clothing. Then, when we were all grime and dirt and our dress uniforms just about ruined, this idiot would line us up and call us the loudest, dirtiest, filthiest and laziest bunch of scallawags he'd ever seen. It was all so pointless and humiliating, and maddening."

"He usually wore those highly polished field boots. He'd call a man to clean them until you could see your face in them. Then he would put them on, go out to the mudhole by the horse trough and kick around in mud there until the boots were completely smothered with mud. Then he'd call on another man to shine them up again."

"While we were working, or on patrol, he'd mouse through our kit-bags, read our personal letters, and poke his nose into everything. When he was sending in his reports on cases handled, they were worded as though he had solved the crimes all alone, he got the evidence, caught the prisoners, and so on, in spite of the fact that other men had really done the job. Most of my fellow-officers were men who have served in the Boxer war, Boer war, the Afghan war and on other frontiers, men with splendid records, and for chaps like that to soldier under a madman, well, something had to happen and it did. Quite a few have deserted."

"What happened to make you clear out?" I asked.

"He sent me out on a case that I knew should have taken me to the north. Nevertheless, the order, written and issued by this idiot, read 'proceed south' to a certain place. A few miles out I decided to return to quarters and show this fool that he had made a serious mistake. When I arrived, however, he placed me under arrest for negligence of duty, in spite of the fact that he had issued an incorrect order. I have it in my pocket. I broke jail, and I'm on my way. I'll be damned if I'll soldier under an idiot any longer."

"What's the program now?" I asked.

"I'm heading north, then west, to give myself up to a certain inspector, who, I know will listen to my story. We've been on the trail on many a case. He'll start the ball rolling to get rid of the madman, and I'm so sure of that, that I'm giving myself up when I could easily forget all about it." Thirty days later the madman was ousted, and for years before he died, his playthings were paper dolls.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever" (Psalms 23: 1, 6).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "God is not moved by the breath of praise to do more than He has already done, nor can the infinite do less than bestow all good, since He is unchanging wisdom and Love" (p. 2).

Productive Versus Political Jobs

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

As every American knows, probably the biggest employment boom during recent years has been in the field of political jobs.

The trend, as recent figures demonstrate, continues. The city of Washington, where such jobs flourish, boasts, for example, a population increase which has crowded it far beyond the limits of both office and residential capacity. A similar expansion is evident on many state and municipal payrolls as well.

But while political payrolls continue to grow, real re-employment throughout the nation lags. Millions of jobless, skilled and eager, still search in vain those opportunities to work and earn and progress, which only a true recovery can bring. And despite the promises of politics, this tragic list grows longer.

For, again as every American knows, only production can create real or new employment. That is because a productive job makes other jobs in turn, as the workers' buying power expands and both raw and finished materials—employing still more workers—are required to meet new demands.

Most political jobs, in contrast, create no new commodities, engender no new demands, encourage no new expansion. Many of them limit these things instead, by penalizing production with heavy taxes to meet their swollen payrolls, or by hampering productive efficiency through bureaucratic restrictions.

When a real prosperity returns it will undoubtedly be achieved by reversing this employment picture. It will be hastened as the ratio of political jobs drops and the number of productive jobs increases.

And the way to accomplish this is to encourage productive enterprise—in field and factory, in forest and mine—instead of making it the plaything of politics, and the support of political jobholders.

Flag Swinging

Flag swinging consists of a swinging routine with flags four feet square, climaxed by tossing the flags into the air with a dextrous twist that keeps the cloth spread taut. The sport is a favorite Swiss pastime, and is a relic of the days when the Swiss used flags to signal across Alpine passes.

By Zeb Potter

The oldest resident of Mokena, Orland, Tinley Park, and Frankfort will remember the days of the Chautauqua and the Circus and how much they enjoyed each of these traveling events.

The chautauqua was originated on the banks of Lake Chautauqua, N. Y., in the 70's by a young clergyman. The program was made up of dramatics, music, and speaking. College boys would come to town and set up the white tent.

To the small towns and trading centers of the states the chautauquas offered entertainment and culture to Americans eager to improve their minds. This was before the hard road and the auto made it easy to get to the city. Radio was not on the air during the era of the chautauqua's popularity.

Noted men such as William Jennings Bryan, Elbert Hubbard, and William Howard Taft, appeared on the program. Bryan was a big drawing card. He knew how to hold a crowd in the palm of his hand. Ex-president Taft was a large man, physically. I remember seeing the contract between him and the chautauqua organization; this agreement specified that Mr. Taft was to travel by train always in a state room, not by berth, for a berth was not large enough.

Chautauquas never made a hit in the larger towns like Boston, New York, and Chicago. These entertainments under canvas differed from the circus in that they gave you a sermon as well as amusement.

This summer in Madison, Wis., the Circus Fans association of America will hold its annual convention on the day the "big show" comes to town. The circus fans as a rule are elderly or middle aged people who in their youth enjoyed the acts of the big tent.

The word circus means circle: It's a Roman word. The Romans built their shows around a circle and of course the chariot race was the most thrilling event of all. The chariot race used to wind up the circus program in the old days in this country. The drivers raced for meal tickets.

P. T. Barnum, the man that brought Jenny Lind, the Swedish nightingale to this country, started the American travelling circus. His outfit, "Biggest Show on Earth" toured the country from Connecticut.

The cry, "hold your horses here come the elephants" will never be forgotten by many of our neighbors who enjoyed the morning parade before the big afternoon and evening show.

The world has rapidly changed in the last ten years. What the next twenty-five years will bring in the way of entertainment I do not know. But I do know that many of us fondly look back through the years in our memories to the days of the chautauqua and the circus.

Springfield Fair

Director J. H. Lloyd of the State Department of Agriculture said today that the 1938 Illinois State fair to be held in Springfield August 13 to 21, will surpass the eighty-five preceding state fairs in attendance in number and quality of exhibits and in premiums offered.

"A complete report was given me today," he said, by E. E. Irwin general manager of the fair, and it appears that the 1938 exposition will heap additional honors upon the show that has become acknowledged as the greatest agricultural exhibition of its kind in the United States.

"Governor Henry Horner has extended his personal invitation to all Illinoisans and to our neighbors in nearby states and in other parts of the nation, and I am certain that all who attend will go away convinced that they have seen a wonderful exposition.

"More than $150,000 has been appropriated by the General Assembly for premiums, and in addition, there are many special prizes to be given by private firms and organizations. The entry lists in each type of exhibit are bulging, and nearly all of the outside exhibition space was contracted for months ago.

"There are many new features this year. One outstanding innovation will be the concert to be presented by the Illinois Symphony orchestra, a unit of the federal project, Works Progress Administration, on Friday, August 12th, the night before the fair opens. This 85-piece symphony orchestra is one of the finest in the nation and I am certain its presence will attract music lovers from all over the middle west.

"At the fair itself, there will be all of the old features, which year after year have caused new attendance records to be set, and there will be many new features.

"To try and review these new features would take too much time, but I can briefly mention the Hawaiian Extravaganza, with a cast of 70 native performers from the Islands of the Pacific, the daredevil automobile racers and stunt riders and many other acts which will thrill and entertain visitors to the fair.

"Primarily the Illinois State Fair is an educational exposition designed to further the progress of agricultural activities in Illinois, and that purpose has not been forgotten in the 1938 fair. But there will be education, entertainment and fun for all who attend whether they reside in cities or on the farms."

A First Food Family

Cheese has a right to its claim as one of America's First Food Families. A generous supply of cheese came over on the Mayflower, along with a live cow to provide fresh milk for the children. The ancient bill of sale for the provisioning of the Mayflower is still held by an American cheese company.

Young Republicans Hold Outing

Members of the Nineteenth Ward Young Republican organization honored Goodwin L. Dosland, Republican candidate for Congress in the third district at their annual outing at the Indian Wood Country Club Saturday, July 30. The third district is one of the hundred that are going to send Republicans to Congress again this fall, asserted Robt. V. Mahaffey, 2058 W. 103rd, Pres. of the group and Roland H. Bradley, 1640 W. 100th pl., general chairman of the young voters' committee of Dosland's campaign.

Nearly 300 confident young workers from the southern part of the county enjoyed golf, tennis and swimming, and in the evening a still larger crowd attended the dinner-dance in the club house.

H. Balwin O'Brien, chairman of the outing committee, was assisted by Miss Virginia Jackson, Miss Harriet Mason, Miss Josephine Harrington, and Arthur A. Dodon.

Mr. Dosland, who celebrated his thirty-fifth birthday Sunday, praised the Young Republicans and declared that they are demonstrating how young people can insure the kind of government they want by participating in politics.

"The young voters of today are the leaders of tomorrow," he said, "and it behooves them to take an active part in the affairs of their country. You are also the taxpayers of tomorrow. You must make known what you want and how much you want to spend for it."

"Above all, you should demand results, that the youth of America be given opportunity to earn an honest livelihood."

Interesting Vacation Trips Among Tinley Park Club Women

By Grace Hannan

Vacation trips have begun among members of the Tinley Park Woman's club. It has been my pleasure to go with some of them in imagination as the following stories were told.

Mrs. Harry J. Dean took the longest trip to date. The Deans drove through to Oklahoma taking the scenic route through the Ozarks. Missouri was entered at the northeast and they departed at the southwest. Bagnell Dam, in south central Missouri has created the Lake of the Ozarks. It is fifteen hundred miles around this interesting new lake with its most irregular shore line.

Then in Oklahoma the forests of oil derricks in Tulsa, Ponca City and Oklahoma City are a revelation to travelers. Will Rogers home town of Claremore, Okla., has the splendid realistic bust in bronze of Will. Excitement was rife over a five way race for Governor.

The Dean's report properous crops from here to there. The very best in years.

Mrs. Arthur DeVal met her brother from the East at their sisters' home in Toledo, Ohio. "Not for 7 years have we met. The weather smiled upon long drives in and about Toledo and territory. Of course I also enjoyed greetings from many friends. It was a splendid trip."

Mrs. F. H. Baldwin made a northwest trip to the Black Hills of South Dakota. Sculptors are busily engaged in the presidential character portrayal in Rushmore. "Oh, the hills were beautiful. Our most delightful! Black Hills trip because of the foliage is superior to that seen on previous trips."

The Irving Stovers have spent the past year of spare time with planning and the execution of their ideal of a new trailer and this writer has never seen a more complete beauty. It is a home made project save for the rearing of springs and an adjustment in the wheels.

All tests including a violent storm that lasted an hour failed to phase the solidity and perfect road worthiness of this carefully built home.

The trailer took the Stovers to various parts of Iowa. Included were Sioux City, and Arnold's Park, a resort at Okaboji Lake.

The Brown-Campbells chose Hess Lake, Newago, Mich. They enjoyed it all and mentioned Little Switzerland Drive. The High Roll-Away. The grandeur of the Manister forest. Brown, Jr., observed the settlers fences constructed of big stumps. Miss Dorothy observed her birthday among other good sights.

Mrs. A. Mesenbrink also went to Michigan to Lake Barron where some plants were visited. Mrs. Mesenbrink mentioned the beauty and comfort of the Reception room. A club room of immense size. The huge sixteen hundred pound capacity vats. "It is my intention to visit home manufacturing plants of our own Chicago district this coming year."

Mrs. Wm. Funk went to Wisconsin, up through the Fox River valley visiting her people here and there enjoying the beautiful variety of nature in that near by Land'O'Lakes.

Mrs. Geo. Zobec stayed nearest home. The Methodist camp at Des Plaines. "What was outstanding this year Mrs. Zobec?" Two features for me. The restoration of those grounds after a five foot flood. I marveled at modern methods and speed in sanitation and the second was Dr. Garth of Youngstown, Ohio. Dr. Garth is a leading Methodist clergyman. "I asked Mrs. Zobec what his chief interest is at this time in his career and Mrs. Zobec said "Young people, home life, organizing a home today a modern interpretation of the life today of a Christian family."

Rube Goldberg Cartoons Next

Rube Goldberg, one of America's highest paid and most popular comic artists, will be a regular contributor to The News-Bulletin, starting in an early issue.

This newspaper has secured rights to the comic strip "Lala Palooza", Goldberg's latest creation. The Countess Lala Palooza, central figure in the comic, has been acclaimed one of the great humorist's most amusing characters, taking rank with his famed "Boob McNutt", "Mike and Ike, They look Alike" and "Professor Lucifer Butt's Inventions."

We are proud to be able to present this outstanding feature for the entertainment of our readers. The first installment of "Lala Palooza", by Rube Goldberg starts in an early issue. Don't miss it!

Will Co., Stock Brings Top Price

Burnet McMichem, well known Will county farmer and live stock feeder was represented on last Tuesday's market at the Chicago Stock yards by a load of yearling cattle that brought the top price of the trade for their weights.

There were 24 head in the drove, which averaged 1004 pounds per head, and sold at $24.00 per cwt.

Top cattle reached the $13 mark every day last week and to date, this is equal to the high mark of the year, established in last week's trade. It is the highest at which steers have been sold since last December.

N. and S. Cook Ball Teams To Play Final Game

The final game of the County series between North and South Cook county Farm Bureau baseball teams will be played at the Farm Bureau annual picnic Tiedville, Santa Fe Park, August 9. Each team has won a game and this game will be played for the championships of the county. Emil Bormet and Carl Klehm will be the opposing pitchers.

4-H CLUB SHOW

In the early forenoon all 4-H club members will bring their exhibits and their years' work where they will be judged.

The exhibit includes girls clothing, calf club, pig club and vegetables.

In the afternoon the sports events will include a number of contests such as races of all kinds for boys and girls and a number of comic contests. To start the ball games out the 4-H club boys teams will play a game for North and South Cook. There will be plenty of entertainment, pink lemonade and everything that will go to help make a successful Farmers' picnic. The public is invited to attend.

A handsome program has been subscribed for by a number of prominent business people of Cook county and will be handed to each visitor to give them a program of all the events in the picnic. Needless to say time will be taken out for a basket lunch at noon.

THE FARMER AND SALES TAX

A number of farmers who sell on Randolph Street market and who operate road stands have made inquiries with reference to the sales tax. After the inquiries Farm Advisor C. A. Hughes has supplied this information: "Any one who sells for retail regardless of whether they raise the produce or not will be required to pay the regular sales tax. Retail sales are sales that go to the ultimate consumer. However any sales that are made for resale are not required to pay this tax. Farmers who sell on Randolph Street Market are selling to wholesale merchants in general and no report is to be made. However farmers are warned that if they suspect that a sale is being made to a consumer who represents himself as not being a consumer, that a statement be secured stating that the purchase is being made for some other purpose than personal consumption. However Randolph street market is assumed to be a wholesale market and ordinarily farmers are not required to secure such statements.

Farmers who make an occasional sale and do not represent themselves as merchandisers need pay no attention to tax payments. However the owners of roadside stands, or those who advertise as selling a produce come within the meaning of the law.

Farm Advisor Hughes says in making this statement that he nor the Farm Bureau is giving no approval of the sales tax law one way or the other, but this statement is merely to give information on an existing tax.

"PEDESTRIAN POINTERS" SUGGESTED BY THE CHICAGO MOTOR CLUB

By ELDERMAN, from THE WASHINGTON POST, June 23, 1938

"I've Been Working On The Railroad."

QUEENS of 1938

EACH year America crowns a new crop of queens, beautiful maidens chosen because they photograph well and will draw attention to whatever celebration they "rule." Often more show is made of the queen than of the celebration itself. This year's crop of queens is easy to look upon and advertises everything from strawberries to stamps. In New York members of the coffee industry dubbed Joan Carson (left) "Miss Coffee" and crowned her with a symbolic wreath of coffee blossoms. About the same time, cherry growers at Traverse City, Mich., picked comely Josephine LaFranier (right) to be queen of their national cherry festival and had her pose fingering a cluster of the red fruit.

Slim-Waisted Frocks For Midsummer Days

THESE last few hot weeks will be a whole lot easier to bear if you have some fresh new dresses to wear around the house—cool, slim-waisted styles that are finished enough for shopping and porch wear too. A detailed sew chart comes with each pattern.

Day Frock for Slim Figures.

This little dress is right at the top of new fashions, with its gored skirt and shaped square neckline, short pleated sleeves for coolness and comfort. It's very easy and Notice that the skirt seams are extended above the waistline, to give a little bosom fullness, which makes the dress more becoming. The skirt has a charming flare. Make this in linen, dotted Swiss, dimity or organdie in a pretty flower print, and you'll love it.

Day Frock for Large Figures.

You'll find this straight, well-cut dress one of the most becoming, most slenderizing, you ever put on. It has a deep v-neck and unhampering in line, so that you can work in it comfortably. Darts on the shoulders and at the waistline give it an unusually trim, slimming fit. A touch of prettiness is added by ricrac braid and the pointed closing. This is a diagram design that you can make in a few hours, and you'll want several dresses made just like this—in dimity, calico, percale and seersucker.

1558 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 and 40. Size 14 requires 4 1/4 yards of 35-inch material; 9 yards of ribbon or braid to trim. 1533 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 4 3/4 yards of 35-inch material. 1 1/2 yards of ricrac braid to trim.

At Bangor, Me., pretty Florence Mitchell was picked Queen of the Bangor-Brewer daisy day, sponsored by the state of Maine and local organizations. This is the "official picture" of daisy day and the mirrors are to help you decide whether Florence is wearing a daisy hat or a daisy crown. Really not very important, but it's an excuse for a picture.

Every girl likes to be queen of the May, a custom which dates back several centuries to medieval England. One of the 1938 May queens was Miss Mary Brophy, being crowned by Miss Joan Lally at Marymount college, Bridgeport, Conn. Maids of honor are usually runners-up in queen contests. Not all queens are popular selections.

Queens are sometimes tough hombres, sometimes have royal names. An example is Lois Mulqueeney, crowned "hostess" of the annual rodeo at Livermore, Calif. She backs up her invitation with a pair of wicked-looking shooting irons.

Miss Stampa from Tampa is Wilma Arline Sallade of Tampa, Fla., who wore a gown made with more than 8,000 postage stamps to publicize the Latin-American stamp exhibition being held in Tampa next year.

Each year California picks its "outdoor girl" at the Salinas rodeo. Among this year's competitors for the queenship was Jane Pendergast of San Francisco, shown here as she demonstrates her horsemanship ability. She won the title.

Mary Bovard jumped out of a packing case at many a civic organization meeting to advertise this year's Los Angeles market week, over which she ruled firmly but graciously.

Wallace, N. C., named Louise Robinson queen of its strawberry festival, claiming that while queens may come and go, she is the most luscious of them all.

Betty Green was given the title "Model Model" by judges in a contest sponsored by the Pacific advertising club. Advertising models, of course, were the competitors.

This year Margaret Chaffee was crowned America's first mimosa queen at Morgantown, N. C. Like all real queens, she had her court of honor for the festival ball.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Interprets the Modern Conception of Meat

Nationally Known Food Authority Explains Why It Rates As a Top-Notch Food.

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York City

AMERICANS spend from one-fourth to one-third of their total food budget for meat. In order to discover whether this expenditure is justified, let us examine the nutritive value of meat, and consider its contribution to the diet.

Almost everybody likes the flavor of meat, from the man who considers that no meal is complete without it, to the child who instinctively eats the meat on his plate before he touches the other foods. The desire for meat is one of the strongest human appetites.

For centuries, man accepted this craving for meat as an indication that it was essential to his well being. But with the advance in civilization, there was an increase in many diseases, and for a period of years, meat was blamed as being a contributing cause to kidney trouble, rheumatism, high blood pressure, hardening of the arteries and gout.

In recent years, there has been a careful investigation of the possible association between meat and disease. In the light of our newer knowledge, the old notions have been discarded. And in many cases, meat now has a place in the treatment of the diseases that it was once believed to cause!

Composition of Meat

Meat is a protein food of the highest type. It is useful both for repairing the millions of cells that are worn out daily and for building the new tissues that are necessary for growth in childhood. The proportion of protein varies with the kind of meat, and the cut. In beef, lamb and veal, it comprises between 14 and 26 per cent of the edible portion.

The other constituents of meat are fats, water, minerals, extractives, enzymes and pigments.

The amount of fat present is an important factor in determining the fuel value of meat. And the more fat it contains, the less protein will be found in a given unit of weight. The different cuts of pork contain less protein than corresponding cuts of beef and lamb, with the exception of lean ham, lean pork chops and tenderloin.

Meat as a Blood Builder

Both glandular and muscle meats are rich in the blood-building mineral, iron, and meat also contains copper. The glandular organs, particularly liver, have great value in the prevention and treatment of anemia. Pernicious anemia baffled physicians for many years until, in 1926, two noted American scientists discovered that liver contains a principle which stimulates red blood cell formation. This discovery has been ranked with the discovery of insulin as one of the greatest in our times.

Meat also contains a high percentage of phosphorus. It is poor in calcium, however, and this necessary substance must be obtained in adequate amounts from

BALANCE YOUR DIET

YOU will find it a simple matter to safeguard the health of your family by serving a balanced diet if you send for the Homemaker's Chart for checking Nutritional Balance. It lists the foods and the standard amounts that should be included in the daily diet. Contains skeleton menus for breakfast, lunch and dinner or supper to guide you in selecting the proper foods in each classification. A post card will bring you this valuable aid to good menu planning. Just ask for the Nutrition Chart. Address C. Houston Goudiss, 6 East 39th Street, New York City.

This calling forth of great physiological activity of the stomach is one reason why meat is said to be the most satisfying of all foods, and to "stick to the ribs" longest.

Digestibility of Meat

In considering the nutritive worth of any food it is necessary not only to analyze its contributions to the diet, but to determine how well its nutrients are utilized by the body. Meat has a high food value because its protein is digested rapidly and thoroughly. Tests show that 97 to 98 per cent of meat protein is digested and absorbed. The length of time meat remains in the stomach will depend upon various factors, such as the amount of fat present, the method of cooking and the degree of mastication. But there is no marked difference in the thoroughness with which the different kinds of meat are digested.

Since it is so completely digested, however, meat supplies little bulk, and it is therefore essential that an abundance of leafy vegetables and fruits should be eaten at the same time.

Meat in the Child's Diet

There has been considerable discussion regarding the place of meat in the child's diet.

There are the same good reasons for using meat in the diet of the child as in the diet of the grown-up. Moreover, the child's protein requirement is greater than that of the adult, in proportion to his body weight.

At the beginning of the second year, many authorities advise that small servings of tender and finely minced beef, chicken, lamb or liver may be given about three times a week. As the child becomes older, he may have meat more often and as his ability to chew increases, he may be given larger pieces.

Some Fallacies Regarding Meat

Many people believe that veal is less completely digested than other meats. But it has been demonstrated that even very young veal digests as rapidly and as completely as beef. It has also been held that red meats are less digestible and, therefore, less desirable than white meats. There is no evidence to support this point of view.

Someone with a gift for concise expression once remarked: "No meat—no man!" His point was well taken. For considering its delicious flavor, essential food values, and ease of preparation, it is easy to agree that THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR MEAT.

SIX GUNS and CARPET TACKS

A Gallos County Story

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

MOST times, here in Gallos county, a six gun's a-got just a little the best of the argument, but there was one time when the difference between two gun toters was a box of carpet tacks.

See that tree a-standin' out there, there at the bend in the road. Well, that's where they finally lynched Butch Manton.

Folks just heard that some of Butch's friends was a-plannin' to ride in to town and take him out o' jail. And Butch a-bein' a cow thief like he was, they just up and taken him out and strung him to that tree. And Butch'd been livin' right, like as not, if it wasn't for them carpet tacks.

It was right here in the Happy Hour where things was a-beginnin'. Butch was at the bar when Johnnie Rucker comes in and was a little slow when he said somethin' 'bout Butch stealin' 50 head of steers from Johnnie, but Johnnie did nick Butch's right foot as the lead from Butch's gun went a-tearin' through his own heart.

Course, Butch'd shot Johnnie without givin' him a chance, but Butch still had that gun in his hand when he backs out of the Happy Hour.

'Fore long after the shooting, Sheriff Tom rides into town and hears bout the shootin'. It kinda hits him hard on account of Johnnie bein' a pal of his'n, and he don't wait for reason why there ain't been no posse after Butch. He lights out for the Diablo canyon country down close to the border where Butch and his gang has holed up for years.

Butch oughta gone right on to the border, but he don't. He stops by the shack, sends them riders of his'n on with them steers he stole from Johnnie and waits back to see if he can't do somethin' 'bout that foot of his'n.

He's a doin' a little doctorin' of his own when Tom rides up. Tom ain't never been a fool 'fore, but a-thinkin' 'bout Johnnie musta got him off, 'cause Butch gits the drop on him and takes Tom's gun but Tom does manage to kick a table over and put out a candle,

Don't let ownership of an automobile rob you of your politeness.

Probably the worst fault in driving a car is believing you haven't any fault.

In these days, on the roads, it's a case of the survival of the fittest.

Thinking about one thing while doing another causes accidents.

the only light that's in the room.

No sir, Butch don't get away from Tom and Tom lives to bring Butch Manton right to the jail from which he was taken and hung on that tree at the bend of the road, down yonder.

You see, Tom, he's been out a-tackin' up signs when Johnnie was shot. Well he'd just brung them tacks long with him, and them tacks is how he caught Butch.

He just spread them on the floor quiet-like while he was movin' around there in the dark and a-fore long Butch steps on one with his foot that ain't got no boot on.

Butch's kinda surprised and lets out a hoop and Tom just grabs in the direction of that hoop.

Early English Pipes
The first English pipes were made of silver, wood, or porcelain, some of the latter being beautifully painted and now very valuable. Instead of a lighter, the Elizabethan gentleman carried a little pair of bronze or silver tongs for picking a live coal out of the fire to light his pipe. The clay pipe, which soon became the most popular form of all, was introduced from Holland, and the long "church-wardens," were provided in all the London coffee-houses. In the Eighteenth century, says London Answers Magazine, pipe-smoking went completely out of fashion in London society, where the dandies considered snuff-taking much more elegant than smoking. The working classes, however, still remained faithful to their clays.

'Phone Company Plan Dial System

The Illinois Bell Telephone Co. is planning to do away with all country telephone exchanges and operators in Will County and install a dialing system instead. According to telephone officials the installation of dials is on the company's 1939 program.

Operators thrown out of work by this change will be placed in other positions by the company where ever possible.

The dialing system is to be installed September 1st in some of the eastern Will County towns, it is reported.

Farmers in the eastern part of the county are aroused by news that the dial phone will go into operation about September 1st. That neighborly telephone operator no longer will ring into the ears of rural residents. But worse than that, the change will cut off to some extent the friendliness that has existed between subscriber and company, with the operator as diplomat.

Farmers are prone to call on operators for information ranging from the time of night to "where is the fire."

Some rural residents want to know if the hand that holds the plow can dial a phone without the use of a pitchfork, hoe or corn husker. Others complain that the telephone company is forcing the farmers to become telephone operators.

Among towns slated for automatic phones are Chicago Heights, Plainfield, Beecher, Crete, Steger, Peotone, Monee, Matteson, and Goodenow, New Lenox, Frankfort and Mokena.

Officials of the forthcoming world series aren't worrying about rain. They need only remember the 3,000 rabid fans who jammed the bleachers and unreserved seats at New York's Polo Grounds before the fifth game of last year's series, undaunted by cold, drizzly weather. Last year's series between the New York Giants and New York Yankees, which broke series attendance records, is expected to be exceeded this year.
